

Polytechnic identity

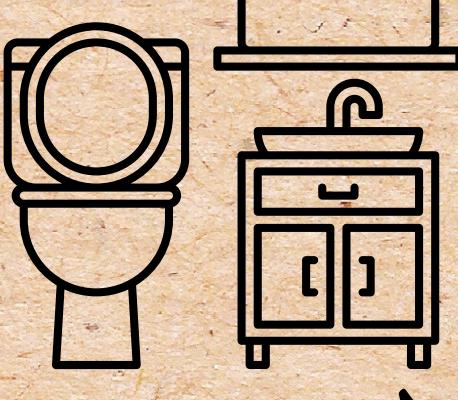

Definition

The polytechnic identity serves as a deep sense of belonging to an educational community that values practical knowledge, innovation, and social responsibility. It highlights the importance of academic excellence, teamwork, and commitment to technological progress and collective well-being. It acknowledges both the advantages and challenges of being part of a polytechnic institution, demonstrating a balanced understanding of the student experience in this context.

Improvements for cecyt 2

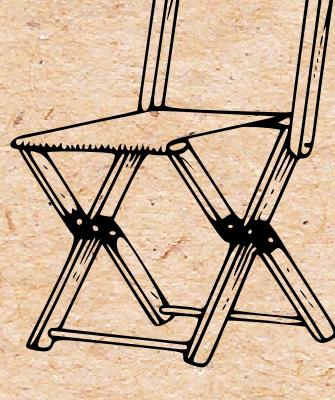

Use of bathrooms

One of the most frequent problems at the school is the misuse of the bathrooms. Students are often misusing the bathrooms, and this is causing significant damage. The school should encourage students to take more responsibility in taking care of the furniture and facilities. By doing this, they will be helping to maintain a better environment for everyone.

Lack of resources

The lack of updated technological resources is a significant issue, and the school should invest in updating the laboratories and equipment. By doing this, students will have access to modern tools that improve their technical and scientific education.

School furniture.

The mistreatment of classroom benches is a significant issue, and an improvement would be to take better care of these benches and the school's furniture.

Conclusion

Addressing the frequent problems of technological resource shortages, bathroom misuse, and mistreatment of classroom benches at CECyT 2 "Miguel Bernard" is essential to maintain the integrity and quality of the polytechnic identity. By investing in up-to-date equipment and encouraging students to take greater responsibility in maintaining facilities and furniture, we are ensuring that students have access to modern tools and a conducive learning environment. This commitment to improvement will enhance our technical and scientific training, aligning with the polytechnic's mission of training skilled and responsible professionals.
